External links Category:Modbus Category:ModbusYou're in the middle of a hike with a girlfriend when suddenly you notice her face get really red. You look at her and think to yourself, "Hey, maybe she's allergic to something." But after a while, she looks like she's about to pass out. After all, she is the one on the ground, saying, "I can't breathe," and that's not a happy thing. You could immediately think to yourself, "I need to get her out of here, but in order to do that we need to work together. We need to figure out a way to get her up off the ground." You start thinking about the difficult logistics of what you need to do to help her get up and make your way to safety. For a lot of women, this just happens all the time. Even if they look fine, all of a sudden their lips are starting to swell or their skin is starting to break out. They're in a cut, or a scrape, or a wound, and nothing you do is helping them. So, you start thinking about all the things that you need to do to help them, but somehow, you can't make yourself do it. It just doesn't seem like you can move or do anything to help them. And after a while, it's like they have a great aura around them that's blocking you from helping them. Or, perhaps, it just seems like they have a great aura that might be getting in your way. So you go back to your hike partner, and tell her, "Hey, you're not doing well. You need help." And the hike partner says to you, "I'm fine." And you ask, "How do you know that you're fine? How do you know that you're really fine? How do you know that you're really not struggling to breathe or that you really aren't
